the nation's constitutional court within three days before the commission confirms the winner, chairman Arief Budiman told reporters. Prabowo's campaign team has yet to decide on a legal challenge, Andre Rosiade, a spokesman said, adding it will continue to report evidence of irregularities to the election watchdog.

Jokowi, 57, is expected to be sworn in for his second five-year tenure on October 20.

The result should allow Jokowi to focus on steps to shield Southeast Asia's largest economy from an escalating US-China trade war that's threatening to hurt growth and fuel a trade deficit. The nation's stocks, bonds and the currency have all slumped in the past month as foreign investors have grown jittery over the outlook for economic growth.

The opposition has said it will protest the result, even after police appealed for people not to participate in rallies because militants linked to the IS were plotting to use the gatherings to launch attacks. Police arrested two dozen militants linked to Islamic State this month for plotting attacks on rallies during the announcement of the poll result. Most of the 29 suspects detained were former IS militants. —BLOOMBERG

INDONESIAN PRESIDENT JOKO Widodo won last month's bitterly contested election by a double-digit margin, official results showed on Tuesday, putting the former furniture exporter in charge of the world's largest Muslim-majority nation for another five years.

Widodo, known as Jokowi, won 55.5% of the national vote, compared to his challenger Prabowo Subianto's 44.5%, the General Elections Commission said in Jakarta early on Tuesday. Jokowi's margin of victory at 11% was almost double the lead he secured in 2014 against the same opponent, commission's data showed. He tally confirmed unofficial quick count results from about a dozen independent pollsters.

Prabowo, as Subianto is commonly known, has alleged irregularities in the conduct of the election and vowed to reject the official results. The former general repeatedly claimed victory, saying his own campaign team's survey of votes, and his supporters have called for public rallies to contest the official results.
